Vindication of Gen. Pomeroy.

We have been asked, of late, what grudge we have against Gen. Lane, that we say so much against him. We answer, we have no grudge at all. We think that he has been of some service to the Free State people of Kansas, and we are willand his sins are used to injure it. He still holds a strong position in the party, and might use his influence for good if it were not for his glaring inconsistencies. By his course, he is converting the party into a mere plaything—an instrument to further his personal ambition, and to minister to his own amusement. He seems to think that he can do and say what he pleases, and that it will be all right with the party—that he can be one thing to-day in this absect and another thing.

Indeed, it is asserted that there are not now, probably, five hundred pro-slavery men in all Kansas. As for Lecompton, it will not have the least show of a chance of being accepted by the people—no one there daring openly to avow himself in its tavor.

Much difference of opinion existed as day, in this place, and another thing to morrow, in that place, and the people to the Leavenworth Constitution. Some have not sense enough to perceive it.—
